Stuart is a business professional with more than 30 years' experience in sales, client service, marketing, management, and training roles. Stuart is currently Master Facilitator with NZ's leading development company, David Forman, and a highly sought-after consultant and facilitator.

Stuart has worked with Franklin Covey for around 15 years (10 of those as Licensee in NZ). During that time, he's partnered with clients from a wide range of industries, helping to build capability in areas of leadership, personal effectiveness, productivity and resilience. He freely admits that his learnings from the Franklin Covey programmes have been life-changing for him and for many others he's had the privilege of working with.

His experience spans advertising, printing, media, publishing, direct marketing, research, and tertiary education. He has extensive experience working with clients within the primary (agriculture / horticulture) and wider construction sectors, but is equally comfortable with corporate, government, FMCG and many other industries.

Stuart is passionate about helping participants to discover and reach their potential and to improve organisational performance. His high energy and thought-provoking style engages, inspires and challenges people to develop their skills and lift their performance and results to new levels. He loves nothing more than catching up with participants a few months after a training programme and hearing about the great gains they've made in the areas most important to them.

Stuart is a very proud Kiwi and is committed to helping New Zealand organisations be the best they can be to compete in a global marketplace. Outside of his very busy professional life, he is a committed family man, a very keen golfer, a competitive squash player, and loves coaching his son's football team.
